Lorraine Hansberry Interviewed

'Whites Dreadfully Ignorant of Negro Life'

By DON ROSS

Lorraine Hansberry, the Negro author of "A Raisin in the Sun," about Negroes, is writing a play about Negroes. Inspired by the fact that two days have recently been set aside on Broadway to honor the failures of Negroes, she has written a play about some theater people who think that audiences won't see Negro plays.

"A Raisin in the Sun," which is the struggles of a family to escape from the Chicago slums, celebrated its first birthday last week at the Belasco. It is the New York Drama Circle prize for the best play of 1958-59. Miss Hansberry started work on the book years ago as a musical play. "Toussaint L'Ouverture," an African slave who led a rebellion against the French on the island of Saint-Domingue in the late eighteenth century.

Miss Hansberry's royalties for "A Raisin in the Sun," her first play and the first by a Negro woman to appear on Broadway, have come to more than $150,000. The sale of the rights has brought her $100,000. Moreover, she is being paid a Hollywood-style fee for the screen adaptation.

When her play opened, she and her husband, Robert Nemlow, lived in a small four-room apartment on Eecker in Greenwich Village. Mr. Nemlow writes popular songs under the name of Robert Barbra. "Cindy, Oh Cindy" is one of his songs and is associated with the name of Robert Barbra. He is also writing, under his own name, a 1,000-page critical study of the life of Theodore Roosevelt.

They Own a House
Although they still occupy only four rooms and walk to their work, they own the four-room house in which they live. The four rooms are considerably more spacious than the previous ones. Their apartment is on the top two floors. The other two floors are empty.

She doesn't like to talk about her money and did so only because the reporter pressed her.

"Is it important how much I've made?" she said. "I don't think about money. That doesn't mean I am above it. I am deeply, deeply grateful for it, and I hope there will always be some. I am not being blasé, but I have no idea what my income is at the moment. I hire lawyers and accountants to look after those things."

Poor Plays

Miss Hansberry said she had understood that the two plays about Negroes which recently failed had been "excessively poor." They were "The Cool World," which told of boys in a Harlem gang, and "The Long Dream," which told of the efforts of a Negro in the Deep South to get ahead by making an alliance with corrupt whites. She didn't see either one.

"I read part of the script of 'The Cool World,'" she said. "I didn't finish it. I didn't think it was a serious treatment of the subject." She did not read "The Long Dream."

Miss Hansberry, a slim, attractive woman of twenty-nine, writes about white people as well as black ones. All the characters in one of the four plays she wrote before "A Raisin in the Sun" was produced were white. But she was emphatic in saying that all the current talk of the unsalability of Negro plays wouldn't scare her into writing more about whites and less about Negroes.

"I can't really allow the limitations of white supremacist thinking to condition my attitude toward life," she said. "That would strangle me to death. I have never thought in terms of 'will I write about Negroes?' anyway. I intend to write about characters as they emerge in my mind, and those I don't adequately know will be poor characters, and those that I do adequately know will be good ones. I don't think in terms of Negro and white."

"I think that audiences will accept good plays without regard to race," she thought for a moment. "That is, if you get them produced."

Miss Hansberry feels qualified to write about white people. She has a theory that Negro writers can know—and some of them do know—more about the life of whites in this country than white writers can ever know about Negroes.

Can't Observe

She went on to explain that white writers—even good ones like Faulkner who work in the South—can never observe Negroes as they really are. The very fact that a white man is observing them constrains the Negroes, and they do not talk or act as they would with their own people. On the other hand, she said, Negroes—especially servants and intellectuals—can enter into the lives of whites and see them as they really are.

"When some one is serving you coffee in the morning you forget to be other than yourself," she said. "The servant is just part of the furniture. There is no constraint."

But even so some of its members are people who have waited on whites. Her seventy-two-year-old uncle, for example, is a bellhop in a Chicago hotel. Her friends when she was growing up were in large part children of servants—chauffeurs and domestics—to white people. From them and their parents she got insights into life among the white people.

The White World

As a student, she entered the white world. She attended the University of Wisconsin and the Chicago Art Institute. "I knew my classmates pretty well," she said. Her husband is a white man, and much of their social life is among white people.

"I think I know the people that I know," she said. "There are areas of life I don't know. I don't know how coal miners live. I don't know anything about the life of a General Motors executive."

"But I might know something about the daughter

(white) of a cheese manufacturer in Madison, Wis. and I wouldn't hesitate to talk about her. Without great and application, she would it much more difficult to talk about me. I'm sure I'll see some people angry by this, but I believe that people are dreadfully ignorant of Negro life in America."

Miss Hansberry's collaborator in the play about Toussaint whom she believes to have been a brilliant soldier and a mist, will be Alonzo Levi, a thirty-three-year-old who attended the Boston Conservatory of Music. He composes the music.

"I gather that Lon is in rarefied musical circles not beyond," Miss Hansberry said. "He has written ballet suites, a lovely concerto and some excellent classical jazz. I suspect a major talent and I believe has the capacity to write kind of lyrical statements will illuminate the character in the play."
